BUDJ BIM LANDSCAPE

Your journey through the Great Ocean Road region and the roads we travel on today follows the 'songlines' or ancient trading routes originally tread by the first people of this land. Your whole visit is a cultural experience when you appreciate the land, the sea, its shelter and resources.

Amongst the cultural experiences in the Great Ocean Road region is the UNESCO listed, culturally significant landscape of Budj Bim – located in the traditional Country of the Gunditjmara people.

The unique lava flow from an ancient volcanic eruption is what created this significant landscape and connects the three main components – the long dormant Budj Bim Volcano and Tae Rak (Lake Condah), the wetland swamps of Kurtonitj and the rocky ridges and marshes of Tyrendarra. Budj Bim's system of weirs, channels and volcanic lava flow allowed the Gunditjmara people to craft the earliest living example of aquaculture in the world. Archaeological investigation of the history of eel farming here proves it dates back over 6,000 years, however it is believed that these practices have occurred here for far longer.
